Inspired by an episode of podcasts and heavy in my heart and thought, I decided to create a new list for myself. This list would remind me what is "my job" and what is "not my job". Like many people, these last months have been full of a series of emotions. They were also full of uncertainty. Just when we think we know what is coming, "WHAP!" - Think again! A new rule, a new procedure, a new expectation. For a while I was allowed to be pulled and torn from the requests and expectations of others. I was convinced that doing it was making a "good leader". I also think, in all honest, I thought that if they saw me hending this way and that way they would have been impressed and convinced that I was really doing "whatever it takes". I mean when it's called your company's spirit - whatever you need, it's what you have to do, right? Wrong. Everything that twisted has led to physical and mental exhaustion. And guest what? Those who were looking for pleasure - has never been enough. They are still dissatisfied and unhappy. And somehow I understand it. I get as during a period of this uncertainty it is easier to look out from us and complain about how others are doing things, against the passage to the inside and face what could be fine. I'm still trying to trace the AMEX customer service agent I lost it in a few weeks ago. While they had committed a mistake, he did not unlawful the kind of reaction I gave it. Blinding, I lost my S & * #. All Pent Up anger and frustration I felt against work-related problems came out of this innocent customer service representative. This is the thing about anger, you can't stay in forever, filter or push you out of you. This experience made me think that maybe I was for other people. Maybe I was the place where they pull out their frustrations with others (the world). Making that connection allowed me to feel more empathetic, but made me understand that it was time to go back to my lane. So this listed this morning.
