Stars and stripes forever flute

In show business, particularly theater and the circus, this piece is called "the Disaster March", as it is traditionally used to signal a life-threatening emergency. Circus bands never play it under any other circumstances. In his autobiography, Sousa writes that he composed the march on Christmas Day 1896. He complained that many conductors played the piece too fast, resulting in music that is "hackneyed". By act of Congress, it is the National March of the United States of America. This helps theater personnel to handle events and organize the audience's exit without panic. If you are looking for the famous piccolo solo, you can find it on top of page 2 of our transcription. Submit your: Friday 21 August 2009 National March of the United States of America This well known patriotic march is widely considered to be the magnum opus of composer John Philip Sousa. Sousa was on a ferry in Europe at the time, and he composed the march in his head. In an interview, Horowitz claimed that the march, being a military march, is meant to be played at a walking tempo. There are no recordings for this tune yet. He had just learned of the recent death of his good friend David Blakely. He committed the notes to paper on arrival in America. The Russian born pianist Vladimir Horowitz, who lived most his life in the United States, wrote a famous transcription of Stars and Stripes Forever for solo piano to celebrate becoming an American citizen. One example of its use was at the Hartford Circus Fire in July 1944.
