Gta 5 how to change license plate without ifruit

by Leonardo R. Grabkowski The Chrysler Sebring's rear license plate is illuminated, as required by most state law's. The light uses a small bulb, which is available at most department and automotive parts stores. The Chrysler Sebring's license plate light is accessible from the car's exterior, which means the trunk panels don't need to be removed to replace the light. The Sebring was discontinued after the 2010 model year. Turn off the Sebring's engine, then move to the car's rear to access the license plate light. Remove the two screws from the light lens, and then pry the lens out. Turn it over; you'll see the bulb. Pull the bulb from its socket and discard it. Push the new one into the socket to install it. Place the license light lens back in its mount. Hold it in place, then insert and tighten the two screws. Remain calm. You can do this, and it shouldn't take much longer than screwing in a lightbulb. Start at the back of the car. Crouch down at the center of the bumper. Unscrew the old license plate, if any. There should be two screws along the plate's top edge. You'll need either a flat-head or a Phillips screwdriver. Set the screws where you won't lose them. Remove the license plate frame, if you have one, and set it aside. Hold the new plate up to the bumper, aligning the holes in the plate with those on the bumper. Place the frame, if any, over the plate. Screw in the two screws tightly. Tug on the plate to make sure it's on firmly. Repeat with the front bumper. vy license plate image by timur1970 from Fotolia.com Personalized (or "vanity") plates are available in all states, most provinces of Canada and in many other countries around the world. Most people who own these plates use them to send a message or as a way to advertise their business. In many states, the only way to find out if the letter-number sequence you want is available is by filing an application. Think of a letter-number sequence that conveys the message you wish to broadcast. In most states, the maximum number of figures for such plates is seven, although some states allow fewer. Check with your state's Motor Vehicle Department (online or in person) to find out how many figures you can use. You should think of several variations and be ready to submit them all due to the popularity of vanity plates. Go online to your state's Motor Vehicle Department website. Many states offer an automated search for letter-number sequences. If such a service is not available online, visit your regional Motor Vehicle Department office. Complete the application form to request a personalized license plate. The form will contain a box where it will prompt you to write in the letter-number sequence(s) desired. This form is available online in many states. Pay the application fee and submit the form. The Motor Vehicles Department will do a search to see if the requested sequence is available. If you submit the form in person at the office, the clerk should be able to tell you at that time if the requested sequence is available. The results can take a few days for online submissions. You may change your request if the desired sequence is already in use. Collect a refund of your fee if the requested letter-number sequence is already used in your state. Return to the Motor Vehicle Department with your receipt to collect your refund. If you filed the form online, the website will direct you on how to collect your refunded fee. In most states, there is no limit to the number of times you may file this request. A personalized vanity license plate says a lot about you, your personality and your car. It's a great way to customize your ride so it's truly yours. Regular license plates are boring, so make your car stand out with a fitting personalized license plate that is unique to you and your car. Some who get personalized license plates choose to get ones that reflect their hobbies or a nickname. Someone who is in love with football could choose something like "NFL LVR" to proclaim their love for the National Football League. Someone who plays a guitar in a band might use "GTR GUY." You can also use a nickname given to you by your friends and family. Think about an interesting trait that you have, and use that as a theme. If the license plate you want has already been taken by someone, add a favorite number on the end, like "CRVET-7". If the car you want the personalized license plates for is your family car, choose a plate that speaks of your family characteristics, or a funny family inside joke. A family with all male children could have a "BOYSRUS" license plate, while one with all girls could have a "GRLMBL" or girl-mobile. You could also get a license plate that speaks to why you bought the car or how you feel about it, like "2MNYKDS" for too many kids or "DADSRYD" (dad's ride) for the dad who sacrificed his car for a minivan. Think about your family dynamics and use it as fodder for a personalized license plate. Do you feel like you have a statement to tell the world? Then do it with a personalized license plate. You could have a short statement like "IM4U2NV" if you think other people would be envious of your car. Or "26Y4U," which proclaims you are too sexy for everyone else. Have fun with your personalized license plate, and remember that it is just that; personalized. You should choose something unique to you, your attitude and your circumstances. The paint on license plates ages and suffers damage like the paint on any other metal surface. When bare metal is exposed it quickly begins to rust and deteriorate. If the paint on your license plates begins to crack or peel, or if you are interested in restoring vintage license plates for a classic car, repainting the license plate is something that you can easily do. Repainting a license plate involves several steps to ensure a top-quality job. Purchase a chemical paint stripper. Various paint strippers are available at hardware, paint and home supply stores. Select a chemical stripper recommended for metal objects. Remove the old paint from the license plate with the chemical stripper. Read the instructions before applying the stripper. Wear gloves and work outside or in a well-ventilated area. Apply the stripper and allow it to penetrate the paint on the license plate for the recommended time. Scrape the old paint off with steel wool, abrasive pads and old rags. Rinse the license plate with clean water and allow it to air dry completely. Apply a self-etching primer to the license plate. Fresh paint does not adhere well to bare metal. Self-etching primer is available at auto parts stores or paint stores in spray can form. Lay the license plate on a flat surface. Hold the spray nozzle 8 inches above the license plate, and apply a light smooth coat. Allow the primer to dry, and apply a second coat if necessary. It is important that all the metal is covered. Apply the base color with an epoxy paint. Epoxy paint is more durable than latex. It is also available in a spray can form. Apply several light coats, allowing for drying time between applications. Applying several light coats rather than one heavy coat provides a smoother finish and avoids heavy spots and runs. Allow the base coat to dry completely. Paint the numbers, letters and other details with a small bristle brush and epoxy paint. All the numbers and details are raised, which makes the job easier. Apply the paint carefully and slowly. Wipe off drips and runs with a clean rag and rubbing alcohol. Allow the paint to dry completely. Apply a clear coat to the license plate to protect the new paint job. Clear coat is also available in spray can form at auto parts and hardware stores. Hold the nozzle 8 inches above the license plate and apply a smooth, even coat. Allow the clear coat to dry. The iFruit; a parody of the iPhone used by one of the lead characters in the smash hit video game, Grand Theft Auto V, can now be yours for real. OK, so not exactly, but you can make your iPhone 5 or iPhone 5s look just like one with a new skin available to buy in the U.S. and UK. The skin is supplied by MobileFun, and at just 1 mm thick promises not to impede use of your iPhone with any popular case. The vinyl layer essentially sticks to the back of your iPhone, 'replacing' the Apple logo and iPhone text with the iFruit branding seen within the game. It's a bit of fun, especially if you're big into the game. Pricing wise we're looking at $12.99/£9.99 Take a look at the iFruit skin at either of the links below. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube The folks behind these license plates have great senses of humor. Coming up with the perfect abbreviation for a personalized license plate is a complicated stuff. After all, "J is Lord" could be read in a few ways. Sure, it could stand for "Jesus is Lord," but it could also mean, well — sound out the letters together, and you'll understand. That's right; some of the most hilarious license plates happen to be extremely awkward. It seems that good manners don't matter so much to this person from Louisiana. They decided to attach a blunt and painfully straightforward message to the rear-end of their vehicle, and it's not likely that anyone stuck behind them in traffic appreciated the sentiment. Photo Courtesy: sahnit kaushal/YouTube Still, getting told you're unattractive via license plate is kind of funny. Anyone with a sense of humor can appreciate the audacious, no-cares-given attitude of this plate. Though it may be easy to get offended by this statement, it's far easier to just laugh about it. Those unfamiliar with internet culture may not see the humor in this license plate, which is a real shame. However, anyone can recognize that "247" stands for 24/7 — as in "all the time." Taking things a step further, doing a Google Safe Search on the three letters will result in some surprisingly explicit results. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube Those results will provide a clear explanation of the word "fap." Not only does this reveal that children with access to Google aren't entirely safe from inappropriate material, but it completely explains the meaning behind this license plate. The fortunate individuals who own one — or several — of Tesla's all-electric vehicles never have to pump gas again. They can go almost anywhere, assured and comforted, knowing that their cars produce basically no emissions. Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube This Tesla owner opted for a pretty entertaining license plate that doubles as an advertisement for the futuristic cars. Like a demi-god riding high above the plebeians, this person felt like revealing their disgust and amusement toward "conventional" vehicles — and their drivers — by saying "GAS LOL." Or, maybe they were commenting on flatus. Getting stuck behind someone who drives well below the speed limit can be irritating, and it can be difficult to understand why someone isn't putting the pedal to the metal. But anyone caught behind this driver has no one to blame but themselves. Photo Courtesy: Zackery Killmore/YouTube There's plenty of fair warning given with this license plate. The "ya" also lets other drivers know that this person is perfectly aware of how slowly they're going, and it's those other drivers' problem — not theirs. If this license plate belongs to a granny, it must be the most sarcastic, self-aware grandma in Virginia. Those who decide to personalize their license plates tend to want to make statements about themselves or the world around them. The challenge is coming up with something that only requires a handful of characters. Well, this North Carolina driver succeeded — most likely in a neat and timely manner. Photo Courtesy: MrBigTrucks101/YouTube Now, anyone who says that they're never late has some high standards. The only trouble with this is life itself — accidents and mistakes do happen, so the likelihood of someone being early or on-time to things 100% of the time, during their whole lives, is basically zero. Abbreviations can be a fun and practical way of shortening long terms and phrases. But you really need to analyze them well before use, or you could end up like this nice mom from Pennsylvania. Now, the boast of "nicest mom" isn't a terrible one. Photo Courtesy: Zackery Killmore/YouTube But spelling is essential. The phrase "ncest mom" looks like "nicest mom," sure. But it also looks like "incest mom," which is an absolutely gut-busting fail. Did no one tip this mom off before she spent the money on her license plate? Before June 17, 1994, a white Ford Bronco was just a car. But after that fateful day, it was known as the car OJ Simpson drove during his infamous low-speed police chase. The next year would see a massive increase in Ford Bronco sales, no doubt thanks to plenty of television coverage. Photo Courtesy: Dirk Anderson/YouTube Even today, it's difficult to see a solid-white Ford Bronco and not think about OJ Simpson. The owner of this vehicle was probably harassed by random people wanting to know if the car belonged to Simpson. This license plate quickly — and hilariously — clears everything up. People from North Carolina sure do tend to make some strange statements with their license plates. This set of tags is attached to a Hummer, so perhaps this message is supposed to be interpreted as "I'm Hummer." But if that was the owner's intention — well, they failed miserably. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube This license plate looks like it says "I'm human" or "I'm hummin'," both of which are fairly odd things to be telling strangers. While the fail is funny enough, it's even better to imagine a less-than-subtle robot with a Hummer, desperately trying to convince everyone that it's a real boy. Honesty is often the best policy. But what about brutal honesty? Sometimes blunt words and intentions can lead to hurt feelings and tense relationships. The owner of this Jetta doesn't seem to care, which is just as refreshing as it is humorous. Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube Let's face it; people can be a real pain. Some people don't understand physical or social boundaries, which makes for some truly awkward situations. This driver seems to have been through plenty of those situations and would like them to stop. Hence, the concise license plate warning. Red cars might get pulled over more often and require more expensive insurance, but this license plate probably quadrupled this driver's chance of encountering some concerned police officers. There are a few things you shouldn't do and shouldn't be while operating a vehicle, and this license plate lists one of the most important no-nos. Photo Courtesy: Cory Doctorow/Flickr Never drink and drive. Never drive drunk. It's against the law, and it's dangerous. But hey, if you want a license plate that says, "drunk," then, by all means, exercise your freedoms. The consequences are sure to be entertaining — not for you, but for everyone else. Oh, Virginia. You have inspired some remarkably delightful license plates. This one features a University of Virginia logo that functions as a free letter V. And the things you can do with an extra V are, well, limited. But this driver didn't let a great opportunity go to waste! Photo Courtesy: Dirk Anderson/YouTube In fact, this license plate reads more like promotional material for a (poorly named) collegiate sports team than a dirty joke. Hopefully, the driver of this car went into advertising, because they've got some obvious raw talent. Any pickup truck owner can tell you how good (or bad) their vehicle's gas mileage is. Some trucks get an average of only 10 miles to the gallon, while others reach a staggering 23 miles or more per gallon. Pickup trucks are usually gas guzzlers, though. Photo Courtesy: Funny Text/YouTube Fortunately for the world, this pickup truck owner felt like publicly acknowledging this hard truth. And the fact that they're laughing about what a pathetic ratio they get makes it easier for others to laugh with them. Even if it's not exactly the most conscientious thing to do in this age of climate change. Pirates are no longer associated with romance novels and history programs. At least, those aren't the only things pirates are known for. A few films starring Johnny Depp, some illegal downloading practices and troubles in Somalia have all elevated the term "pirate" into contemporary consciousness. Photo Courtesy: mundotaku/YouTube This driver — surprise, they're from Virginia — decided to show their love for pirates by turning their vehicle into a rolling Jolly Roger flag. One that says, "Aarrrr," just like a stereotypical pirate does. The only thing that would make this better is if the owners blasted the Pirates of the Caribbean soundtrack on repeat. The owner of this Ford Explorer must love puns and wordy jokes because their chosen license plate is a clever play on the vehicle's model name and a popular cartoon character. Even people who don't have children know what Dora the Explorer is. They may even know what to say to Swiper. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube So, combining a license plate that says "DORA THE" and a Ford Explorer equals "Dora the (Ford) Explorer." Though the placement of these elements is a little off unless you read anime, it's still a surprisingly amusing sight. Though many evil supervillains tend to go into hiding, staying inconspicuous as often as possible, others choose to be as in-your-face as possible. Though it's unlikely that there's a devious, super-powered bad guy behind the wheel of this Toyota — unlikely, but not impossible — this license plate seems like the perfect choice for an extroverted villain. Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube Imagine being cut off in the middle of traffic. It's a scary situation sometimes, especially when some wacko tries to speed around slowly moving cars. But if someone swerves out in front of you and their license plate reads "muaahaha," that's just weird, random and fantastically hilarious. Virginia's at it again! This license plate may make you laugh — initially — but keep on looking. You're bound to end up with burning questions and spicy suppositions. How did this end up as a license plate? That's the biggest question, of course. Photo Courtesy: sahnit kaushal/YouTube But, perhaps more importantly, where is this poop? "Eww, poop" is often said when someone spots a previously unseen pile of feces somewhere unexpected — like a car. It's a mystery and one that will probably never be solved. Still, who would want to take a ride in the poo-mobility? Where's that poo? There were some upset feelings going around when this beautiful car received its tags. Though the plate may just look like a series of letters and numbers, it's an acronym paired with a restaurant term. Photo Courtesy: sahnit kaushal/YouTube "WTF" stands for "what the F**k," and "86" means "get rid of it." So, properly translated, this license plate reads, "What the F**k, get rid of it!" Those are some pretty strong words — and even stronger feelings — for a license plate. Perhaps a few rounds of counseling would help this metal tag calm down. Canadians aren't too far from Americans, culturally and geographically speaking. So, it makes sense that they'd also generate some surprising, embarrassing and amusing license plates. But this one, well, you can see for yourself. Photo Courtesy: Funny Text/YouTube Firstly, if there is a child out there called BJ, we get it. But if this kid has a mom who's proud of them — proud enough to make a license plate in their honor — that mom should have a friend. That friend should have put their foot down about this plate. No one should be a BJ mom. Smart Cars are eco-friendly, cute and compact. They're also the butt of hundreds of jokes due to their incredibly small size, low speed and general goofy appearance. They're electric cars that were designed to reduce city pollution and help increase parking capacity. Photo Courtesy: mundotaku/YouTube But they look like clown cars. This driver seems to have weathered many conversations about how smart their new Smart Car actually was. After probably the thousandth argument, this owner went for the most blatant license plate ever: "NOTDUMB." It's so childish; that's why it's great. A dad in California — most likely, judging by the type of humor — created this referential, unexpected license plate. Driving an Impala is nothing out of the ordinary. There's nothing inherently funny about Impalas. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube Unless, of course, you add "Vlad the" before the name on the plate frame. Vlad the Impaler probably wouldn't laugh at this one, but that's just because he'd have no idea what a car is. Also, he probably wouldn't be very good at reading modern English. Just saying. Lamborghinis are expensive cars. And making that statement is on par with saying that the sky is blue. Everyone knows the sky is blue, and everyone knows that Lamborghini's cost as much as some houses. But the owner of this rocking-red sports car seemed to be unsure about the whole thing. Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube That's why their license plate reads "N DEBT." Looking at the type of car attached to that license plate, it's no wonder! But, this could be an anti-theft feature. Thieves targeting this car might be put off when they realize the owner is broke. Californians have a reputation for being beautiful, sun-kissed golden gods and goddesses, slumbering in beachside mansions and wandering off to endless wineries. That's a pretty exaggerated stereotype. But then these license plates show up, and a tiny part of that Californian swagger gets proven true. Photo Courtesy: sahnit kaushal/YouTube For example, this driver wants the world to know that they love their butt. That's great, but it's not exactly news that everyone needs to know. Unless, of course, this person's love for their own posterior has changed the world in a massively positive way, in which case, keep on lovin' those buns! If you thought "drunk" was a bad license plate, get ready for "asleep." Falling asleep behind the wheel is just as bad as driving while under the influence, as both tend to result in fatal car accidents. So, tipping off every driver behind you — including police officers — to the fact that you may be snoozing is both somewhat responsible and absolutely strange. Photo Courtesy: JacobsLifeinVegas/YouTube The only other possibility is that the driver of this vehicle is the opposite of "woke." Actually, no matter how you look at it, this license plate is kind of nonsensical. "Maryland Vampire Volkswagens" sounds either like an indie band or a vampiric carpool service. Either way, it's awesome and worth more than a few bouts of outrageous giggles. Unless, of course, this license plate is a serious warning and not a comical piece of metal. Photo Courtesy: Dirk Anderson/YouTube Then again, would a mystical, undead, supernatural being advertise themselves with a license plate? All signs point toward no. So this vehicle — and its tags — shall forever remain known as "The Vampire Volkswagens." The mention of Maryland is optional. On second thought, maybe it's supposed to read, "VA empire?" A Florida person decided on this alliterative and off-color license plate, and unless you speak and read Spanish, it's just an average, sports-oriented tag. But, if you do understand Spanish, you'll know precisely why this plate is so darn funny. The letter M logo for the Miami Dolphins acts as a free extra letter. Photo Courtesy: mundotaku/YouTube Paired with "ierda," this extra M helps to spell the Spanish word for, well, er, poop. But it's not a very nice word for poop. It's just an average of a curse word — the four-letter S word. It's so apparent that a dad made this decision. "Van Diesel" is hilarious, and it actually fits that van perfectly. Vin Diesel is bald, and Van Diesel is hairless. They're both pretty strong, pretty tough and capable of traveling long distances. Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube It'd be great to find out that this van participates in drift races in honor of Diesel himself. Hopefully, the machine hasn't adopted any of the star's swag and attitude, because that would make for a very bumpy ride. The car chases could get intense! Motorcycles need license plates too, you know. But this one was chosen based on potty jokes. Yep, you're reading that right. It says "POOPS." Obviously, this biker knows what makes them laugh. But the unintentional addition of "Mass" — short for Massachusetts — creates a new phrase. Of course, it begs the question of whether it was unintentional at all. Photo Courtesy: sahnit kaushal/YouTube The terror of every public restroom, "Mass POOPS" is a frightfully funny license plate. Unfortunately, it does kind of act as a label for anyone operating that bike. Moving to the desert means plenty of sand, hot sun and not a lot of green vegetation. All in all, figuring out what to do for fun can be a significant challenge. Photo Courtesy: Tooco/YouTube This indecision — and a healthy spoonful of ambivalence — shows up clearly in this Arizona license plate. When asked what text they'd like on their personalized license plate, this driver apparently answered with, "IDK LOL." If that seems far-fetched, think again. Truth is stranger than fiction. If the children are our future, then according to this Virginia license plate, there will soon be no future. Soylent Green might be people, but at least it's not tiny human children. This cannibalistic license plate is so ridiculous, so laughable and so perfectly framed, it almost seems unreal. Photo Courtesy: mundotaku/YouTube This plate features two tiny, blood-red handprints on the side. It's supposed to be reminiscent of childhood fingerprinting. But this innocent image becomes something from a horror film when paired with the text, "Virginia / eat the / kids first." Brilliant. Virginians know how to make a ludicrous license plate. Again and again, these folks prove that they have some strong statements to make with their tags. Like many awkward license plates, this example could be interpreted in many different ways. The most obvious interpretation, of course, is that it says "vibrator." Photo Courtesy: Adriana Minadi/YouTube But also possible is the occupation title, "vibe rater," which is someone who rates vibes, categorizing them as either good or bad. Ok, so there's no such thing as a vibe rater. Whoever paid for this bad boy wanted their license plate to reference something pretty specific. how to change license plate ifruit. how to use ifruit to change license plate. how to change license plate on ifruit app. ifruit can't change license plate
